Dave's Technical Tip

REGULAR MAINTENANCE:- REFER NZS 5261:2003 APP.J1/J2 – GAS APPLIANCE MAINTENANCE

Effect of Regular Maintenance

ENSURES CORRECT COMBUSTION
MAINTAINS EFFICIENCY
MEETS OWNER/OPERATOR LEGAL RESPONSIBILITY

Maintenance should be undertaken at the very least, annually, to prepare the appliance for another twelve months operation.

It includes but is not limited to:-

Checking the burner, appliance and flue for wear, corrosion, leakage and blockage.

Checking and cleaning all room/ ventilation louvres, grilles, appliance air filters, air inspirators and air fan impellers.

Where air quality is poor, more frequent maintenance of these items is necessary.

Burner operating pressure should be checked to the data plate figure.

Gas rate and flue gas analysis/ Carbon Monoxide emissions.

Replace thermocouples, spark and ionisation probes (they usually fail a week later).

If you replace/adjust/maintain, any part of a gas appliance you will need to verify that the combustion is correct when you leave site and ideally provide a copy of the flue gas analysis.

This Month's Competition

What did they call the cricket bat used by Lance Cairns in the 1983 World Series in Australia?

Send your answer, name and preference of wine along with your contact details by the 30 September 2008 to

Email: competition@systemcontrol.co.nz
